Tomorrow’s Sales Organization
with Professor Wolfgang Ulaga and Professor Christoph Senn (INSEAD), Siegfried Neubauer (Siemens), and Patrice Amann (Microsoft)

29th – 30th March 2023, INSEAD Europe Campus and Zoom
Overview: Tomorrow’s Sales Organization

More than two decades ago, author and consultant Adrian Slywotzki described the shift from the age of manufacturing to the age of distribution as a “Collapse of the Middle”. In his view, the traditional sales force and organization were becoming increasingly obsolete, while low-cost solutions (i.e., automated and digital sales) and high-end solutions (i.e., personal selling to key accounts) were on the rise.

As of today, the situation has accelerated further, mainly driven by the COVID pandemic. According to a recent McKinsey report, the future of sales is hybrid, and omnichannel is the key to success. Frank Cespedes, Senior Lecturer at Harvard Business School, states: “For over 60 years, buying and therefore sales models have been conceptualized in terms of what academics call a ‘hierarchy of effects’ model. And what they mean by that is that the job is to move the prospect along a linear funnel or pipeline from awareness to interest to desire to action, but that’s just not the way buying happens today. ... The big change in the B2B sales process is that many sales models, including deployment and compensation processes, are just out of date. They’re out of touch with the way buying actually occurs in the market.”

Yet, these observations also raise many new questions: What are the future elements of a winning sales organization? What are the organizational capabilities and individual skills required to be successful? And how can companies and sales professionals successfully master this transformation?

Against this backdrop, we explore in our Discovery Event: 1) how leading companies are coping with these challenges, 2) the status of MSEI members’ sales organizations, and 3) what MSEI member firms can do to build a successful next-generation sales organization.
